

eLearning Day 4
K12 Alert from: March 22, 2020

Dear Croton-Harmon Families,

I hope this communication finds you well and experiencing some level of comfort this weekend. All of us in the district are ready for Day 4 of eLearning tomorrow, and we are excited to see how everything will go with a full school week ahead of us. I know from my personal experiences at home the many challenges this is presenting. On Friday I mentioned that our longtime consultant, Nancy Sulla, is dedicating her efforts to creating structures for parents at this time. She asks us to consider eight needs for our children as they engage in their learning from home: Structure, Projects, Resources, Downtime, Conversation, Balance, Celebration and Reflection. Ideas that address each of these can be found at her website, Parenting through the Pandemic.

This week's learning will continue to be centered on the use of technology tools with which our students and teachers are most comfortable. In an effort to bring you information and resources for this plan, we have compiled an eLearning Guide that you may find useful. We recognize that students (and teachers) are missing classroom interactions. Please know that we are exploring, with our teachers, possible ways within an asynchronous environment to provide further communication through the utilization of video and screencasting tools.

Our whole curriculum team has been working tirelessly to reinvent instruction for this very unexpected circumstance. As we do with all of our undertakings in the Croton-Harmon Schools, we will continue to reflect and iterate as we move into the future. Your insights and experiences are valuable in helping us consider our next best steps, and I always welcome hearing from you.

Sincerely,

John Griffiths

Assistant Superintendent
